SINGLE MALT WHISKIES

Single malt Scotch whisky is one of the most revered spirits in the world. It has such a scope for variation, it can offer complexity or simplicity, unbridled power or a subtle whisper. To legally be called a single malt Scotch, the whisky must be distilled at a single distillery in Scotland, in a copper pot still from nothing other than malted barley, yeast and water. It must then be aged in an oak cask for at least three years and one day. There are regional variations within Scotland, and terroir and geography play a massive part in the character of the whisky. In a single malt, it is the oak barrel that has the largest effect upon the character of the finished spirit, purported to be at least 60% proof.

BLENDED WHISKIES

Blended Scotch whiskies, must be matured for at least three years and one day in oak casks.

They are made from grain whisky, though it has a more neutral character, so they include malt whisky as well, this peeps everything up and brings body and complexity. Whiskies from different distilleries have a character of their own and, just as people of different temperaments are often incompatible, so some whiskies will not blend happily with certain others. The Malts and the Grains in a blend must therefore be chosen to complement and enhance their respective flavours. Blending is in no sense a dilution. The blender's task is to combine different single whiskies, to produce a blend which brings out the best qualities of each of its constituent parts.
